

Unit 3 Reflection

Overall I definitely felt like that this Unit 3 worked a lot with time management and group collaboration with our teams as a whole. Along with the great amount of creativity, designing, and generating of what we needed as team surfaced challenges that were dealt with but also great personal values and further insights with working with a team that one should really be appreciative for.

This unit was really based of the major project of our groups' newsletters. The newsletter was an enjoyable project to work with, not too stressful yet it required a good amount work to have completed, and also a fair amount of creativity that I personally appreciated when I found the time to actually contribute and work with. Along with putting together the design of my group's newsletter, I had fun writing creative filler pieces for the project; the longer pieces were nice also but did take up time and a different bit amount and type of effort that was slightly difficult for me to find, especially during this time of the term. Another component that was required for this unit was the Online PowerPoint Workshop, which was fair and I believed was valuable for certain groups to take a part of, like with receiving input with improving the format and content of what they had for their PowerPoint presentation at the time of the workshop. Another requirement was the Unit 3 Conference, which was definitely helpful with helping teams getting an idea and ability to ask the instructor questions on how they should be progressing as a whole, along with facing any problems or underlying issues that could have occurred at the time. Then there was the Biz Buzz 5 discussion and optional Biz Buzz Reflection assignment for this unit, being average and continuing with something that we have been doing throughout this whole term, all good there. There was also the Collaborative PowerPoint Presentation, being good practice with presenting what a team had learned, created, and experienced with a certain project at hand, with our case being the newsletter. And finally, the Self-Assessment Memo where team members on an individual basis evaluated one's self as a group member overall during these past two units, which personally I believed was a very nice and valuable reflection to write since it allowed a student to ponder and think about their performance on a deeper and more personal level.

I feel like there was more learning on a personal level individually rather than on a general informationally level like from what can learned by reading the textbook or what is presented on presentation slides. This Unit 3 was a great valuable learning experience to go through, especially since working in the industry later on will most likely involve group work such as what we just experienced these past couple of weeks.
