

Lab #3

Practice vim, input, and conditional execution

Defining Terms:

Compiler: A program that processes statements and converts them into machine language that the computer's processor uses.

Data Type: A predetermined characteristic of a variable.

Int: Whole number values.

Double: An integer that stores twice as much.

Type Cast: Declaring a different variable's characteristic as a part of the calculation.

Declaration: Stating beforehand the data type of a variable.

Variable: A placeholder in memory that can change.

Assignment Statement: The information given to a variable.

Operation: The process/actions that are being done between certain information.

Operand: The information that is being calculated/compared of a statement.