I have chosen a recommendation report about “preferred rail alternatives for each of the 26 sections of the Southeast High Speed Rail corridor between Richmond, VA, and Raleigh, NC”. Overall this document is very well designed and organized consisting of 113 pages in total, but even such professionally presented document can be missing certain important elements; mostly referring to elements discussed in Chapter 10.

One aspect of this document is that it contains a well created introduction portion at the beginning, but only in this section is where the overall purpose of all of the recommendations is mentioned. There is no obvious conclusion stated within the report (276). Also, this recommendation report is lacking a works cited page (294). Their resources may have been discussed within their introduction section of the document and they do include their actual data included at the end of the document, but nowhere located throughout the document is it clearly cited where their sources have been collected from.

These differences reflect their purpose of this document may not to directly insist a change/action about their presented recommendations, but more of a simple presentation of what they support to be implemented. So in other words, their audience may not only be towards the greater authority of who has the power to implement their recommendations, but also people who are just curious what they have to say about the subject.
